

MONUMENT UNVEILED

MARKING SITE OF THE HOME OF REBECCA MOTTE.

Orangeburg Daughters of the Revolution and Three Hundred Guests Take Part in the Exercises.

Three miles from the village of Fort Motte, on a great hill overlooking the muddy waters of Congaree river, says a correspondent of The News and Courier, the Moultrie Chapter, D. A. R., of Orangeburg, with three hundred invited friends, held full swing Wednesday. It is a happy trait, implanted in the civilized breast, which bids us to reverence the memories of heroes and heroines of a past age, and the "Daughters" are honoring themselves by honoring and perpetuating the name and fame of Mrs. Rebecca Motte.

She it was, as every schoolboy knows, whose home was taken and used as a garrison by the British during the Revolutionary period. She it was, as tradition goes, who shot Marion's "loaded" arrows which set fire to her own home in order to rout the Tories; and it is to her memory that a strong and abiding granite monument was unveiled Wednesday.

One feels that he is treading hallowed and historic soil hereabouts. A few miles up the river, and within sweep of one's vision, lies buried old Commodore Gillon, who figured somewhat conspicuously during his day; who owned thousands of acres around his obscure grave; who was the first president of Charleston's Chamber of Commerce, and whose name is perpetuated by a prominent street in that city upon which her Postoffice formerly stood.

A few hundred yards down the river is clearly seen old "Belleville" plantation, one of the finest in the State (now owned by the Peterkings), upon which lived another Revolutionary hero, Col. William Thompson. His magnificent home, which stood with its Revolutionary bullet holes until fifteen years ago, was also a British stronghold and fell simultaneously with the Motte Fort in May, 1718.

Hard by was the home of Col. Isaac Hayne (whose descendants are still honored citizens in this neighborhood) who espoused the cause of American Independence, and who, at the head of a corps of dragoons, around Charleston, fell into an ambush laid for him by British commanders. Thrust into a dungeon and condemned to death, without trial, by Lord Rawdon and Col. Balfour, he went to his doom with the same intrepid courage which he displayed on the field of battle.

In a few appropriate words, Miss Mary McMichael introduced the orator of the day, Mr. A. S. Salley, Jr., the well known historian. He read, in a most impressive manner, a carefully prepared speech, setting forth in detail the facts bearing upon the life of Mrs. Motte and the period in which she figured. He scouted the myth that she shot the arrow which fired her own home.

The truth of history forced him to state that her house was burned by a ball of gum resin and brimstone, set on fire and flung on the roof. The house was not raised to the ground, as some historians state, but was accidentally burned several years after the close of the Revolution. He gave high praise to the Moultrie Chapter for its noble work and suggested that it build a monument in the public square at Orangeburg to Gen. Moultrie, the great patriot, twice Governor of South Carolina.

It was a great mission to erect these monuments to our illustrious dead, and he specified those to Sumter, Marion, Hampton and Calhoun. He was glad that the new county bore the latter's illustrious name, but hoped that old Orangeburg would not be called upon to honor any more in the same way. It was a scholarly address, from start to finish, and greatly enjoyed by his large audience.

I. W. Bowman, Esq., of Orangeburg, made a few happy remarks, then read a letter of congratulations from "the Rebecca Motte Chapter of Charleston," and placed a palm-leaf wreath upon the monument sent by the Charleston chapter.

Col. P. T. Hildebrand read a telegram from Mrs. Brant, of Yorkville. State regent of the D. A. R., to Mrs. A. C. Ligon, expressing her congratulations. The Orangeburg Brass Band enthusiastically played "Dixie" when the crowd repaired to a beautiful grove nearby and enjoyed a splendid picnic dinner. The inscription on the monument reads as follows:

"Site of Rebecca Motte's Home. Sacrificed for her country, May 12 1781.

Moultrie Chapter, D. A. R. May 12, 1909."

Married in Savannah.

The Savannah News of Tuesday says: "Miss Frankie Wannamaker and Mr. Troy E. Easterlin, of Bowman, S. C., were united in marriage yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. I. S. Riley, No. 411 Berrien street, Rev. W. A. Nisbet officiating. The wedding was a quiet one. After the ceremony a reception was tendered the couple by Mrs. Riley. The groom is a prosperous young business man of Bowman. The bride is a milliner of the same place and has a large circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Easterlin will spend a week in Savannah before returning to Bowman, their future home."

A Mysterious Wedding. At Mrs. Norman Bull's Tuesday, May 18, at half-past 8 o'clock. A delightful evening, with refreshments, and a wedding, and all included for 25 cents. A hearty welcome to all who come.

PROHIBITION MEETINGS.

Mr. Harley Gave Two Lectures at the Town of North.

Rev. John L. Harley, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of the State, made interesting talks Monday and Tuesday nights at the Methodist church on prohibition. Rev. Harley came unexpectedly and his meetings were given short notice, but being well acquainted here and being known as a zealous fighter for prohibition, the meetings were largely attended and much enthusiasm shown. He spoke both times from different points of view on the subject and his discussions filled with valuable facts and interspersed with bits of humor, made him both interesting and delightfully entertaining.

Mr. Harley spoke Monday night on the financial feature of the liquor traffic and forcibly impressed facts not often thought of. The problem of eliminating the traffic of whiskey, he says, is fraught with difficulties, but the surest way of doing it is to attack it in the most vital place, the money side. The difficulty he thinks, was once like the boy whose hat was taken from him by an elephant in a circus. The elephant standing on his hat, the boy became furious and drawing back his fist said, "You two-tailed beast, you, if I knew on which end your head was I would knock your brains out." The vital spot of the liquor traffic is no longer like the elephant's head to the boy, in doubt about, but is found and all there is to do is to strike there. The folly of the claims held by whiskey advocates that it brings large revenue to the towns, to the schools and to other purposes appropriated to, was laid bare by Mr. Harley and he showed from authoritative records that all the revenue gained was more than offset by the cost of courts, jails, and lawyers fees to try and punish criminals produced directly by liquor. Men who advocate the sale of it for revenue are just as simple as the little girl whose mother paid her to take cod-liver oil and then gave the money back to her mother to buy more oil with.

Mr. Harley Tuesday night spoke on the subject in the light of what has been gained for prohibition, what some of the difficulties are, and what will be the outcome of the fight going on. He produced from reliable sources a vast amount of information as to the great reduction in whiskey sales in those States operating prohibition laws and how fast the idea is gaining favor, and emphasized the statement that prohibition is prohibiting. He complimented the recent legislature on shutting out of the State all whiskey agents but deplored its action in other respects. Mr. Harley reminded the people of the great unfairness practiced by the liquor element to discredit the claims of prohibition and to defeat if possible the efforts of prohibitionists.

He pointed out that the most unfair scheme used to defeat the prohibition was the work of irresponsible hired newspapers, of iniquitous liquor journals, and the distribution of obscene literature by whiskey drummers allowed to travel over the country. On account of the compromise made by many preachers and others who ought to strike for the cause, prohibition is suffering.

Mr. Harley is doing hard work and urges the people not to let the present conditions exist and says in order to win we must be on the alert. He is asking for liberal contributions that he might enlist more help and distribute literature over the 21 wet counties before the election in August, at which time he hopes the question will be settled right.

HEARD FROM AGAIN.

of the good old way, was each combatant a new shirt and confinement to their home until some more hair and more whiskers grew some. My, my, I remember at the approach of each lumbering old train, there was to be found at least a dozen darkies with their coffee pot and a little weak stuff, a few friends fish and plenty of gingercakes to appease the hunger of the weary traveler. Well, from those old ruins the sons, grandsons and great grandsons, with a good cross of blood from other sections, Branchville has been converted into a very pretty little town, with broad streets, up-to-date mercantile houses, good schools, churches, railroad work shops, sawmills, gineries, etc. All controlled by what seems to be fine business men and women, and last but not least, is the appearance of that long felt want, the Branchville Journal, edited by one of Colleton's best bloods. I see no reason why Branchville's future should not be a thing settled. And now, as I expect to travel that way again, and don't want to be put to the trouble to carry feed for man and beast, I'll stop, trusting that there still stands open doors for me when I come.

"UNCLE JACK."

Passed Away.

Mr. G. Elliott Hayden, a resident of this city, passed away at his mother's home on Amelia street yesterday morning at five o'clock. He was a practical printer and worked for a number of years in this office. He also served a number of years in the Government Printing Office at Washington. He was about thirty-seven years of age. Several months ago he was stricken with paralysis but survived the shock. He was again stricken on Tuesday afternoon from which shock he never regained consciousness. May his ashes rest in peace.

Wants Duty on Tea.

Senator Tillman today introduced an amendment to the tariff bill, making tea dutiable at 10 cents a pound. The purpose is to protect the tea industry of South Carolina, and to encourage its production wherever practical.

ESCAPED CONVICT CAPTURED.

Negro Who Ran Away From Lexington Caught Here.

Caroline Richardson, colored, was arrested in this city Thursday morning by Mayor Dukes and Superintendent of Streets J. B. Ethridge. Richardson is about forty years of age, copper colored and has a rather pleasing facial expression. He is an escaped convict, having been sent up from Richmond county in 1898 for the murder of a negro named Myers.

In an interview with the Orangeburg correspondent of The News and Courier, Richardson admitted his identity and stated that he had escaped with about seven other convicts from the chain gang guard in Lexington county in November last, and made his way direct to this city, where he has been ever since working under the name of Frank Middleton.

He said he did not know the names of those who escaped with him, neither did he know their whereabouts, and that he took other directions and he has heard nothing of them since. He says they were shot at by the guard, but none of them was hit. He found little difficulty in releasing himself from the shackles once he was beyond the reach of the guard, and then made his way here on foot.

When asked why he had risked stopping so close to the scene of the crime and among those who would surely recognize him, he said his intention was to go to Georgia, but, as he had no money, it was necessary to make some to pay his expenses.

Mr. Etheredge had had his eye on the negro for several days, but was not in possession of the proper information on which to arrest him until Wednesday night, and he lost no time in taking the fellow in Thursday morning. This information came through the Penitentiary authorities at Columbia, and also showed that a reward of $50 is offered for the capture of Richardson.

WHAT WAS THIS RUIN?

AN OLD MAUSOLEUM OR FORT ON THE SANTEE.

The Builders of This Strange Structure Left Us No Clue That Time Has Not Obliterated.

Mr. M. T. Carlisle writes of an old ruin in this county in the State that will be read with interest by those its romantic development into a never heard of it before. Here is what Mr. Carlisle says about this mysterious old ruin:

South Carolinians have begun to treasure the history of their entire State. Much effort is now being made to preserve to future generations its romantic development into a great State. However, there is much of its history that dates so far back into the vague, uncertain past, that its very obscurity stimulates in us the wildest conjectures.

On one bank of the Santee river near Parler, at a point formerly known as Pinckney's landing, stands a remarkable ruin. It is evidently the remains of an old fortress or of a mausoleum. However, it can not be determined for which purpose this vast work of masonry was employed.

As it stands today it consists of a wall inclosure in rectangular shape, 30 by 60 feet. The walls are five feet high and 18 inches thick. They are completed on top in octagonal shape, which indicates that they stand today at their original height.

A noticeable peculiarity of the walls is the fact that they are solid and intact, not containing a single opening for a door or gate, they are built of firm English bricks, which are substantially cemented. It is with great difficulty that one is able to extract even a souvenir brick from the wall.

As to the history of this unique inclosure very little can be learned. It is known to have existed very much in its present condition 150 years ago. Beyond this period it is obscure and uncertain, but is thought for various reasons to have existed since the earliest settlements were made in the State.

It is situated on a high bluff overlooking the river just opposite a huge bend and for this reason is claimed by some to be the remains of an old fort. This theory is further strengthened by the substantial nature of its walls. However, the fact that the walls are only five feet in height, we feel, totally disconcerts this idea.

The oldest inhabitants of the section claim that far back about the close of the 17th century an English settlement was made at this point. The settlers after a year of hardships, had nearly all died of malaria (which is known to be severe in that section). The few survivors erected this walled inclosure as a mausoleum around the graves of their dead comrades and returned to England.

This theory is substantiated by the existence of a large surrounding field, which, like the inclosure, dates back beyond the recollections of the oldest inhabitants for several generations. This, also, of course, is nothing more than mere theory, but being the more rational of the two is the generally accepted one.

What ever the facts may be there is some unrecorded history of importance connected with this mouldering ruin worthy of inquiry; indeed, there is something romantic and fascinating about this secluded spot. More than one curious observer, after much examining, inquiring, dreaming and guessing, has had to abandon the hope of ever reaching the clue to the history of this singular structure.

I for one have examined the wall with the utmost care but could not discover anything that enlightened me in the least. The builders left us no clue that time has not obliterated unless they have placed something in one of the cornerstones. I hope some time to make a search for this.

Though I can offer no explanation for the existence of this interesting structure, I feel that it must be a landmark in South Carolina history. Its very antiquity inspires one with awe and we can not look at its grim walls without feeling that it stands as a monument commemorating some historical achievement.

Must Move On.

The St. Matthews Advance says: "Some half dozen young men of this community, if rumors are true, are living lives of immorality to such an extent, in fact, as to become a stench in the nostrils of our people. Sheriff Dantzer has been appealed to, and has already issued a decree to several negro women to move on, and it would not be surprising to see grave charges preferred against the men at any time. 'Clean out the dens of immorality' should be the motto of every self-respecting white man in St. Matthews, and we believe it will be done." That sounds like business.

THEY WANT BASE BALL.

Movement Started in Sumter to Form a League.

A dispatch from Sumter to The News and Courier says: "Some time ago efforts were made to revive the South Carolina League of Base Ball Clubs, of which League Sumter had been one of the leading clubs, having won the pennant two of the three years of its existence."

"This year, however, owing to the heavy losses incurred during the past season, it was decided not to place a team in this League, and it seemed for a time that Sumter was to be without base ball during the summer. But the ball spirit would not die, and it is now doped out that Sumter is yet to have a team in the field."

"Efforts are now being made to form an association of four or six towns in Eastern Carolina, such as Darlington, Cheraw, Florence, Manning, Orangeburg and Camden, and to secure a team largely of college ball players, which would give the towns some interesting sport during the summer. Such teams could be maintained at comparatively small cost, and the cities which would be included being close together, would reduce the expenses materially."

"The fans of Sumter are anxious for such a League to be formed and if the other towns will but do their part Sumter is ready to do hers. This has always been a good ball town, and the attendance is good. With teams maintained at a small salary limit, and with the towns close together it is believed that all expenses can be met and the clubs will not come out behind, as is former years."

Such a League would be a good thing for all the towns, and we would be glad to see Orangeburg in it.
